

ABSTRACT

Neuronal damage is detected by providing a biological sample derived from the subject, detecting in the sample the presence of a neurofilament subunits or their breakdown products, and correlating the presence and level of the neurofilament subunits and their breakdown products detected with the degree of neuronal injury.

5